

HALL AND SINGER BATTLED SLAYERS SIDE BY SIDE UNTIL BOTH WERE SLAIN

Bruises on Bodies Betrayed Struggle, Physician Testifies

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Aug. 17.—A fierce hand-to-hand battle, a struggle in which the Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and his beloved choir singer, Eleanor R. Mills, fought side by side against a common enemy until death parted them, was revealed for the first time today, four years after their cut, bruised and bullet-pierced bodies were found lying almost in embrace on the Phillips farm.

A few minutes before Dr. William H. Long, Somerset county physician, told the tense spectators who packed the courtroom of County Judge Frank Cleary here, that Mrs. Mill's throat had been cut not once but several times and that she and her pastor-lover had suffered bruises and slight cuts on arms and shoulders, State Senator Alexander Simpson, special prosecutor, and Timothy Pfeiffer, defense counsel, almost came to blows on the question of whether there were bloodstains on the cape and scarf Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, the rector's widow, had sent to Philadelphia to be cleaned just after the murder.

Ready With Proof

In white heat of anger Simpson shouted to the court that he could prove the widow Hall never before had sent articles to the Pennsylvania city to be cleaned and dyed.

These were the highlights in a day of fierce conflict, a day of grueling, grinding testimony, during which almost a dozen witnesses were called to the stand. Simpson was fighting to have Henry de la Bruyere Carpender, cousin of Mrs. Hall, and "Willie" Stevens, her eccentric brother, held for the grand jury on charges of murder.

At no time since the investigation into the strange killings on September 14, 1922, has the actual murderer been brought back to the minds of those who listened to the testimony so vividly as it was today. The clothes which the cleric wore, the coat still marked with blood, were exhibited.

Ray Schneider, the New Brunswick millwright, went carefully over his finding of the bodies while out with Pearl Bahmer. Dr. Long ran through the notes he made four years ago when he looked over the bodies.

Waited for Order

"The reason I never ordered an inquest or an autopsy," he said, looking back to the days of bungling, "was that it was not my job. I placed my notes in the hands of the late Somerset Prosecutor Azariah Beaman, and he should have ordered me to take action. He did not."

Court Detective Ferd David came back to the stand once more and identified the minister's clothing. He denied that he had blurred fingerprints on the glasses which had been placed carefully in position over Dr. Hall's eyes.

"There were flyspecks on them—that was all," he asserted, vehemently.

Visited Dyeing Plant

His subordinate, County Detective Charles A. Collins, told of a visit to Bornot's cleaning establishment at 13th and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, and of his futile attempt to find out if there had been bloodstains on the Hall garments.

"The man I talked to said the wool scarf might have had stains

Kautzman Got $800 In Milk Graft Split, Says Prosecutor

How the $2,000 milk bribe obtained from Samuel Doner of 508 West 40th St. was split was brought out today in the trial of Frederick W. Kautzmann, before Judge Levine, in General Sessions Court.

"William H. Kehoe got $500," said Assistant District Attorney Ferdinand Pecora, "the same amount to Thomas J. Clougher; $200 to Harry Danzinger and the balance to Kautzmann."

Henry Silverman, who drove the truck containing the unlicensed milk seized in January, was first witness. Then Doner was called. Asked how much he was worth he counted on his fingers, but was unable to state the amount.

'Cry Baby' Thug Sobs Out Story of Beating by Police

Twitching in body and plucking nervously at his face, Frank Kerrigan, one of the "cry baby bandits," took the stand in his own defense before Judge Barrett in Bronx County Court today.

Kerrigan sobbed a vivid tale of how he had been tortured and beaten in a third degree examination by detectives after his arrest. He whined:

"They kept me without food and even refused to give me a drink of water for fifteen hours.

"They beat me brutally. I was afraid they would actually kill me. I finally signed a paper they put before me, to gain relief."

Trial Nearing Close

Kerrigan declared he thought police were trying to "pin a murder on him." His testimony was substantially the same as at the first trial, declared a mistrial when a juror objected to continuing in service.

Philip Oberst, leader of the "cry baby" bandits, took the stand at the session's close. The defense rested. Summation will begin tomorrow, and the fate of the "cry babies" should be in the jury's hands by tomorrow evening.
